

We have decided to donate 10% of our net profit to organizations that support free software so that when we start to make a profit the community will make a profit too.

GNU/Linux and the free software world in general face new threats every day from those who want to oppose the epoch-making change that is taking place in the information society, to defend privileges acquired also and above all thanks to laws that move too slowly in comparison with this world's speed.

We like to think that GNU/Linux is the greatest discovery of recent years after Internet and at the same time a fundamental part of it (indeed, most of the world's servers, the machines that host web sites, work thanks to this operating system).

Donating to the organizations that give the most support to all this, brings us closer to them while concretely enabling them to perform tasks that they would sometimes not be able to complete due to lack of resources. These organizations don't sell anything, but give freedom to us all, constantly.

However, since GNU/Linux is also and above all made of "normal" users who use this system every day, we wanted to be sure of contributing with concrete gestures towards them too, and this is why we give 10% of our hours to 4 prizes (for now) that enable anyone to be able to realize their ideas more quickly.

We hope that many companies will follow us and understand that strength does not lie in being closed but in being open and will help those who can help them most.
